GENERAL ELECTION TUES., NOV. 5

a declaration of policy: The public welfare, and the preservation of public education, make it necessary that there be uniformity of action throughout the State' in all instances where school authorities, voluntarily or under compulsion, undertake to require children of different races to attend school together.

"Section 3 of the act answers the question, What happends if a Negro child is enrolled under court order in a white school? This is what happens:

"'The making of such an assignment, and the enrollment of such child, or children, shall automatically divest the school authorities making the assignment and the enrollment of all further authority, power and control over such public school, its principal, teachers and other employees, and all pupils then enrolled or ordered to be enrolled therein; and such school is closed and removed from the public school system...'

"From that moment on, all authority, power and control over the particular school or schools thus affected is vested in the Governor. It should be emphasized that not all schools, whether elementary or secondary, are thus 'closed and removed from the public school system.' In Norfolk, for example, there are 29 white elementary schools. It is doubtful if more than two or three might finally be affected by specific enrollment of specific Negro pupils.

"To keep the illustration simple, let it be supposed that all the handful of Norfolk Negro children who are being pushed by their parents into this unhappy affair, are enrolled in a single school. That school is now closed. If these students on reconsideration, agree voluntarily to withdraw, the school may be reopened promptly. Assuming their refusal, the Governor's next step is to undertake some reorganization of the closed school. There his authority is very broad; he could order that certain grades not be taught, or certain subjects not be taught, or certain uniform requirements as to scholarship be established.

"If these measures fail, what then? The law directs the Governor to reassign the children from the closed school to any available public schools where such assignment is practicable and to the best interest of the children involved.'

"At this point, an alternative plan becomes available to affected children and their parents. If it proves impracticable to reassign the students to other public schools, State funds may be granted — in identical amounts to white and Negro alike—for education in private, non-sectarian schools. Simultaneously, the affected locality is authorized to provide local tax funds for the same purpose.

"Suppose the locality, through its School Board, Board of Supervisors, or City Council ,declares that it wants the closed school or schools returned to the public school system, to be operated on a racially integrated basis? This can be done, but in this event, State funds are cut off not merely from the affected school but also from 'all other schools of its class (elementary or secondary) in the political subdivision in which it is located.'

"A dozen other statutes interlock with Chapter 68. One law protects teachers and principals, so that the State would continue their salaries during any period that a school was closed. Another act permits private educational corporations to participate in the State teacher retirement program. Still another exempts the school buildings that may be arranged on a makeshift basis by a private educational corporation from the standard building requirements of the State Department of Education. The whole group of laws constitutes a well-planned whole.

"There would be no 'massive closing of schools' under this plan. Here and there, in localities attacked by the NAACP, a few particular schools might be closed, but with ingenuity and determination on the part of parents and public officials, such closings could be kept to a minimum and educational opportunities could be provided for the affected children.

"Virginia is far from helpless. We would say to the NAACP, not grimly, but indeed cheerfully, Virginia has barely begun to fight."

This is an average, up-to-date kitchen. It has everything the housewife needs to make her work easier except one very important item—enough light. The sole source of illumination is the fixture that was available ten years ago. The fixture is placed squarely in the center of the ceiling where it is behind the lady no matter where she works.

LIGHTNING STRIKES TWICE

Gillette, Wyo.- Henry Edwards, 62, was truck by lightning in 1914, while he was out herding sheep. This summer he was struck by lightning again — within two miles of the first accident. He was knocked unconscious by the bolt, but regained his senses in time to extinguish a fire in his sheep wagon.

The one look that has gone over this season in a big way is pointed toes for footwear. At first, this look was regarded with skepticism. However, now it has become the accepted thing and, we must say, we like it.

IN FASHION NOW

The Paris fashions for fall all seem to follow one pattern and could well be described as "shapes with no shape." Perhaps this "sack" look will take hold in the large cities of France, but we are willing to bet our new hat that it won't—not in the U. S. A.

In fact, to walk about the fashionable streets of Paris today, you would have no idea that the sack look is being sold as the "latest" from this old fashion world fashion center.

There can be seen a few adaptations of the "sack" look that are not too bad. At showings and gatherings of extremely fashion - conscious women, it's even hard to find a costume as "gone" as the fashion magazine would have us believe all the women of Paris are wearing.

In fact, we are always left with the feeling that French women are "past masters" at showing off and playing up the female form.

FARM NEWS

By J. A. Smith, County Agent

The amount of plant food removed from the acil by a crop is one index, but not the only one, to the amount of fertilizer to apply.

The amount of fertilizer farmers are advised to use is the amount which has produced the highest yields at the least cost in carefully controlled tests. The amount of fertilizer actually contained in the hay when it is cut is not always closely related to the amount applied.

The Virginia Station has just finished a report which shows the fertilizer elements contained per ton of hay in each of 11 cuttings of alfalfa, over a three year period. About 100 pounds of nitrogen, 15 pounds of phosphate, and 50 pounds of potash were found in each ton of cured hay.

The amount of phosphorus contained in a ton of hay was practically the same regardless of how much phosphate fertilizer was applied. The percentage of phosphorus in the plant is relatively stable and does not vary over a wide range. The plant seems to say that this much phosphorus is needed for healthy growth — not much more and not much less. The only effect of applying too little phosphate fertilizer is a smaller yield.

The potassium content of the hay varied widely, depending on how much was available to the plant from the soil or from the fertilizer applied. The potassium in the hay ranged from 30 to 60 pounds per ton, with an average of about 50.

A ton of alfalfa hay also was found to contian 50 to 60 pounds of calcium, which was taken from the soil, and from lime which had been applied to the soil.
